When they refused to surrender he spened fire on them with his pistol, wounding both men.

They retreated to an adjacent house and were followed by Jones, who suddenly found himself surrounded by at least a dozen men. They, however, knowing a large posse was in the vicinity, made a hasty retreat.

The officer stuck to his two men and held them in the house until his party came to his assistance. The captured men will be taken to Fort Smith to-day.

and made a spirited defense. Alderman A. B. Olson was the prosecuting witness, and half the neighborhood was subpoenaed to testify. When the trial was ended Judge Jones inflicted a fine of $10, and O'Connor, as agent and representative of the live stock, was cast into the city jail to await the appearance of the $10.

Like other disorderly characters, the seven goats and fifty geese were given time to leave the town, and Chief Speers was instructed to see that the
